John Ellis "Jeb" Bush is the younger son of the 41st President of the United States, George Herbert Walker Bush and the 43rd President George W. Bush. .

After 18 years old, he entered the University of Texas at Austin to study Latin. After only two and a half years, he completed his studies with a degree in history. Jeb became a major shareholder, and has since become prominent in the business community.

In 1994, George and Jeb respectively ran for the position of governor of Texas and Florida. As a result, his brother won. Jeb regained his lost ground, was elected governor of Florida, and was re-elected in 2002.

The eight-year governor's career has earned Jeb a good reputation. Under his administration, the unemployment rate was the fourth lowest in the United States, has been low, and the tax burden has been reduced to the lowest point in 10 years. He is an "accessible governor." For eight years, he has insisted on communicating with the public through the Jeb website, and emails from the governor.
